The programme listings on the following pages are ordered by borough area. Open House London is in part funded by individual local authorities. Unfortunately Bexley, Bromley and Kingston-upon-Thames are not participating this year. Lobby your local councillors to ensure their inclusion next year! The index (→ p140) lists buildings by type. You can also use our online search facility at openhouselondon.org.uk/search and our app to find the buildings you want to visit. All access to buildings is on a first come basis unless otherwise specified.

The borough's urban core is centered on what was once the Essex village of Barking, but its real heart – and the place its modern history begins – is Dagenham's Becontree 'cottage' estate. When it was built, (1921-35) for workers at the nearby Ford plant at Dagenham, it was the largest housing estate in Britain. Its sheer scale – 27,000 homes and a population of 100,000 – was unprecedented. As the LSE’s Tony Travers writes in London’s Boroughs at 50, it has been 'remarkably successful'. So too, have more recent additions to the borough, especially Barking Town Centre, with its 'fake' ruin, colonnades and brightly coloured offices. Bold experiments in housing too, characterize the borough: new council housing at Anne Mews and Barking Riverside by the GLA with housing association L&Q stand out.

BARKING & DAGENHAM
Barnet takes its name from the Saxon word baernet – meaning ‘a burning’ and refers to an area cleared by a forest fire. It was created in 1965 from suburban areas of Hertfordshire and Middlesex. Barnet’s architectural jewel is Hampstead Garden Suburb. Founded in 1907, it remains a fine example of early twentieth century residential planning. Brent Cross, a standalone shopping centre, is historically significant as well: a forerunner of today’s all-encompassing retail experience, typified by the Westfields in east and west London. Nevertheless it is being redeveloped: the Brent Cross Cricklewood Development is a £4bn masterplan to create a new town centre including 7,500 homes, 27,000 jobs, three re-built schools, new parks and community facilities, an additional train station and major road and public transport upgrades.

Barnet is the only London borough with a registered battlefield site: The Battle of Barnet fought in 1471 during the Wars of the Roses.
It may be an outer borough, but parts of Brent reach deep into central London: the tip of the former borough of Willesden is a two-mile walk to Marble Arch. It takes its name from the river that separates Willesden from the other old borough it was paired with—Wembley. Because of its proximity to the centre, the demand for housing is high, and in the past two decades the council, based in its strikingly modern Civic Centre has prided itself on the regeneration of its housing estates, such as Chalkhill and Stonebridge. Today, major projects in Wembley Park and South Kilburn are underway, and part of the Old Oak Common development, with proposed location for an HS2 station and more than 24,000 new homes, falls within the borough.

Camden, which occupies a third of central London, is one of those boroughs with a national profile. Kids in Glasgow and Manchester long to visit its markets, bars and nightclubs, while among media watchers everywhere it is known for its progressive politics. Architecture fans too, hold Camden in esteem, for its astonishing array of council housing projects, commissioned in the main by borough architect Sydney Cook, who occupied the role between 1965-73. More recently, the redevelopment of King’s Cross, from a giant industrial backland into the most celebrated new city district anywhere in Europe, has done much to shore up Camden’s reputation for good urban design.

Hampstead
Station architecture has developed from the 1907 expansion of the line to the 1923 extension of the line from Golders Green to Edgware. Edwardian flourish of Leslie Green contrasting with neo-Georgian style in Stanley Heaps’ stations.
The City of London may be the historic heart of the original Roman settlement but it is more commonly thought of as the de facto capital of the world’s financial industries. It has also been utterly transformed in the past two decades with a crop of skyscrapers. In contrast with the more North American-flavoured Canary Wharf, the City, with its plots defined by ancient street plans, offers a very British take on the tall building phenomenon. The Gherkin, the Cheesegrater, the Walkie Talkie – each has an exuberance and monumentality that defines the look and feel of modern London today. The borough also has strong cultural ambitions with pioneering arts festival Sculpture in the City (which runs all year round) and a new concert hall planned for the Museum of London site.

The compactness of a 2000-year old urban core is fortuitously well-suited to the operation of a globalized financial service centre – Michael Hebbert
Croydon has always believed in the power of architecture to transform lives. When the first wave of tall buildings emerged in the 60s, it was on a scale considerably more ambitious than anything planned for central London. And while not all of the ideas explored in the borough have succeeded, it remains an essentially confident place. This is partly due to the fact that it had been an all-purpose county borough long before reform of the LCC in the sixties, with a long history of civic independence. Over the past decade the borough has employed a roster of good architects to revitalise its town centre. Several masterplans have been produced for East Croydon, West Croydon, Mid-Croydon and the Fairfield Halls area and a huge retail development is planned for the centre.

Ealing

Ealing contains a wide variety of interesting suburban architectural styles ranging from classic Victorian suburbs to inter-war Art Deco housing and post war estates. It also has a number of historic churches and manor houses, especially in Northolt and Norwood, which betray the borough’s rural past. And despite major roads such as Western Avenue and the North Circular, Ealing has many fine open spaces. Crossrail, which arrives in 2019, has already sparked development and plans for a new cultural quarter. The borough is home to Park Royal, the largest industrial estate in the country and can also expect major new investment at Old Oak Common, part of which comes under Ealing’s remit.

Enfield may be a product of the railway age, with extensive development along the old Great North Road but estate agents will tell you it has a 'village' feel. This is partly due to its proximity to the green belt, but open spaces like Groveland Park have a distinct suburban pastoral ambience. Architecturally however, Enfield is renowned for its impressive underground stations at Arnos Grove, Southgate, Oakwood and Cockfosters, all designed by Charles Holden in the early thirties.

Today Enfield is focused on 'placemaking' with five priority locations identified: northeast Enfield, Enfield town, North Circular Road, central Leeside and in what will be one of the largest housing renewal schemes in Europe, Edmonton Green.

From suburban interwar housing in the south to the architectural set pieces of the Old Royal Naval College at the heart of the Greenwich Unesco designated world heritage site, there is much to distract architectural trainspotters in the London borough of Greenwich. And that is before we consider the Greenwich Peninsula. The transformation of this once polluted industrial site began some 16 years ago with the ‘dome’, now known as the O2. More recently, education and cultural facilities have been added, and a residential quarter is emerging. Elsewhere, new homes along the Thames and the redevelopment of estates in Kidbrooke, are proceeding. New Crossrail stations at Woolwich and Abbey Wood should also kickstart regeneration at both Royal Arsenal and Thamesmead.

This west London borough’s priorities centre on attracting inward investment for three simple reasons: to grow its housing stock, ramp up its business offer and establish a more sustainable built environment. For example, its Decent Neighbourhoods programme seeks to reset the balance of its large postwar estates by introducing new housing and a variety of tenures. The Westfield shopping centre, which opened in 2009, has proved successful, encouraging further development of the White City area (the site of the Olympic games in 1948). The planned future redevelopment of Old Oak Common is also expected to attract considerable investment and completely transform the northern part of the borough.
Haringey

Talk about contrast: think of Crouch End or Muswell Hill with their Victorian and Edwardian suburban houses. Now consider Tottenham with its gritty streets and football stadium. Then there are the former industrial sites strung along the Lee Valley. And, if you look hard enough, you’ll also find Folds, a three-storey home with a ground floor transformed by an extension with a pleated roof (it was designed by the team behind the 2012 Olympic cauldron). And don’t forget Green Lanes, especially if you like Baltzers. This is Haringey, also known as the former boroughs of Hornsey, Tottenham and Wood Green. As for what the future holds, new housing will play a key role in two new high-density schemes, one at Tottenham Hale, the other at the old Clarendon Gasworks (Haringey Heartlands), are leading the way.

Harrow is the only London borough whose boundary is the same as it was before 1965 when the Greater London Council and the new 32 boroughs were created. The Harrow we are familiar with today—sir John Betjeman’s ‘Metroland’—emerged as a result of the Metropolitan Line extension in the 1920s and 30s. Its housing stock is rich, ranging from ‘Tudorbethan’ semis to a number of Art Deco properties. In recent years it has adopted a proactive development culture, and placed the regeneration of Harrow town centre at the heart of its place-making strategy. Elsewhere Pinner is considered to be one of London’s most beautiful villages, with the view along its High Street one of the Capital’s best.

The earliest known document relating to Harrow is a charter covering a grant of Land by Offa, King of Mercia, to Abbot Stidbehr of St Albans in 767 AD.
Havering is the most easterly of London’s boroughs. Its topography is ever-changing: The Thames-side marshes become farmland, which in turn become gentle hills. The settlement pattern is equally diverse, from tiny rural villages and isolated manor houses to lush, verdant suburbs or how about the garden village at Gidea Park or east London’s largest commercial centre at Romford? There are regeneration plans in the pipeline for Romford, Hornchurch and Upminster but the largest of the lot is London Riverside, which, if fully realised, could provide 25,000 new homes and 8000 new jobs. In the meantime residents, and visitors, can enjoy Rainham Marshes, a subtle, smart example of how clever planning and low-key architecture can make the countryside more accessible.

Hillingdon, bounded on the west by the Colne Valley and to the south by Heathrow airport, is London’s most westerly borough. And while, much like Redbridge, it has no legacy of housing estates built in the sixties and seventies (which today would require massive investment to maintain) it has instead, an interesting mix of older village settlements, as well as farms in the green belt and classic early 20th century suburbs. Heathrow however, remains the most important factor in determining the borough’s fortunes: with a decision on a new runway for London expected soon, any further development at what is currently Britain’s biggest airport will clearly have a major impact.

   This area of West Drayton has the largest cluster of architectural heritage dating from the 16C through to the 19C, including St Martin’s Church (with tower open) and Southlands which is mainly 18C (Queen Anne). If there is time there will be a shorter walk through The Closes (which was once part of a Roman trackway from St. Albans to Staines) to the former Manor House.
For much of the 19th century Hounslow was all market gardens and orchards. Today, it is a modern industrial centre and a classic London suburb. Its proximity to Heathrow – and the M4 corridor – has fuelled its success as a business hub, attracting the likes of IBM, Sky and GlaxoSmithKline. But its attractiveness as a residential quarter is central to its development since at least the 1850s when large-scale housebuilding in the area began. Yet Hounslow also has a rich architectural heritage: Chiswick House, Boston Manor as well as Hogarth’s House and most of Bedford Park, the classic Victorian suburb. In the years to come expect regeneration projects to reboot Chiswick Feltham, Hanworth and Bedfont.

Islington is a varied, diverse borough on the northern fringes of the City. And while it is known for its handsome Georgian and Victorian streets, there are a number of social housing projects dotted throughout the borough. Two of its centres typify this contrast: The Angel and Finsbury Park. The first is a smart, busy, food and drink district set amidst some of London’s most charming conservation areas. The second is an emerging neighborhood, with a vibrant transport interchange, a new theatre and park which, the council hopes, will attract new investment to the area. Architecture clearly matters to the borough: it has a good track record in giving planning permission to interesting buildings, whether AHMM’s refurbishment of the Angel Building, to the swimming baths at Ironmonger Row.

Stretching from Waterloo and the South Bank to Streatham Common, Lambeth is very much a borough of two halves. On the north side, Lambeth is home to global businesses and a world-class cultural hub (the London Eye, the National Theatre) that it shares with Southwark, while further south, it is known for its splendid open spaces such as Brockwell Park. Actually, make that three thirds. Because between these two extremes, lies Brixton, London’s quintessential inner city locale, and famed today for its markets, galleries and expanding creative industries sector. Like neighbouring Wandsworth however, the real transformation is occurring by the Thames, especially the stretch between Vauxhall and Blackfriars Bridge.

One of London's greenest boroughs, much of the area is typically suburban with development stimulated by the expansion of the tube network in the 1930s. It has a number of older 'village' centres such as Merton, Morden and Mitcham but the focus for recent investment and regeneration has been the centre of Wimbledon. Well located with good transport links and a pleasant local environment, Wimbledon will figure in Crossrail 2 further encouraging investment and new development. There are some older commercial and industrial areas in south Wimbledon and Colliers Wood and the borough is encouraging regeneration with its renewable energy policy and a new high buildings policy and using its growing arts and cultural industries to drive forward regeneration.

Merton Regeneration Project
Circle Housing Merton Priory was formed in 2010 following the transfer of stock from Merton Council. Circle Housing Merton Priory owns and manages around 9,500 homes across Wimbledon, Morden and Mitcham. They are committed to investing in Merton for the long-term and want to create safe, secure and well-designed homes and outside spaces. As part of the Merton Regeneration Project they are consulting with residents on Eastfields, High Path and Ravensbury about plans to redevelop their neighbourhoods.

- 2,600 new homes are planned over a 12 year period. This involves replacing 1,000 existing homes and adding 1,600 new homes across the three neighbourhoods with £900m investment.
- Initial planning applications are being prepared for High Path, Eastfields and Ravensbury. If planning permission is granted, building work on the first new homes would start in late 2016, with the first residents moving into their new homes in 2018.
- Regeneration means building new, well-designed, energy-efficient homes to meet the needs of residents now and in the future. The programme of community development focuses on residents’ wellbeing, health and safety, education and financial inclusion to build stronger communities.

- www.mertonregen.org.uk
This east London borough is the focus of the capital’s eastward advance with Stratford, which played host to the Olympics in 2012, now repositioned as London’s newest and most vibrant metropolitan centre. A sprawling transport hub, the Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park, the new Westfield shopping centre, and the East Village neighbourhood (formerly the Athlete’s village) are central to what could be described as London’s most ambitious city-building endeavour. To some observers it is even developing its own architectural style, with brash, colourful, statement buildings, dominating the skyline no matter which way you look. When we consider the tragedy of the Ronan Point explosion in 1968, which saw the partial collapse of a Canning Town tower and which killed four people, the borough’s rebirth as London’s eastern ‘heart’ is nothing short of astounding.

When Crossrail arrives in 2018, Ilford town centre will be just 23 minutes from the West End making it even more attractive to newcomers. It has, says the LE’s Tony Travers, always been a place of aspiration and mobility. It is perhaps why Redbridge is one of the most ethnically diverse areas in the UK. The 2011 census showed a non-white population of 66 per cent, more than three times the national average. It also has a low proportion of people who identify as having ‘no religion’. What does all this mean? Serious housing and education challenges in the years ahead. Despite the task ahead, Redbridge is faring well: its schools are good and its towns are being strategically developed.
Richmond

The Royal Borough of Richmond upon Thames is the only local authority in London to straddle both banks of the Thames. It also has the highest proportion of parkland and public open space of the capital’s 33 boroughs. Given its long history playing host to royals, the rich and the famous, there is therefore for its clear air and open spaces Richmond today remains wealthy. Its population has a high proportion of graduates, the botanical research centre at Kew is a world-leader, and its cultural life is enhanced by Richmond Theatre (designed by Frank Matcham) and Twickenham, the home of English rugby. It also has one of London’s smallest social housing sectors, at just 12.5 per cent.

Discounted entry to Kew Gardens – more architecture within. Edward Cullinan Architects (new wing) 2010. www.kew.org
From the vibrant Bankside cultural quarter to the leafy heights of Crystal Palace, via rapidly changing Peckham and elegant, conservative Dulwich, Southwark is home to some of London’s most significant architecture. Much of new London, for example, and its shining landmark buildings like the Shard, Tate Modern, the South Bank promenade and City Hall, all reside in Southwark. But you will also find Bold Tendencies in Southwark, the summer-long art gallery that takes over a multi-storey car park in Peckham that represents London’s emerging ground-up design culture and Dawson’s Heights, a housing megastructure overlooking the Dulwich Estate, that typifies the utopian thinking of post war council architects. Enjoy.

Key

- Sutton has a well-deserved reputation as a green borough. Not only for its parks and tree-lined streets but also for the pioneering BEDZED scheme, which some consider a model for low carbon housing. London’s first car club, for example, was introduced there. Sutton also forms part of the Wandle Valley regeneration corridor, with the borough committed to its environmental improvement. The local economy however, is small compared with most London boroughs, a factor the borough is seeking to address through its green business network and One Planet Living initiative developed with environmental charity Bioregional. Interestingly, the council was selected in 2010 as one of four trail areas for ex-Prime Minister David Cameron’s big society initiative, largely on the strength of its active voluntary sector.

The City of London’s twin, a centre of church and crown, and a counterweight to its sibling’s mercantile power. Much of London’s cultural power resides in Westminster too – it bristles with museums and theatres, and swallows up most of the capital’s world-famous ‘West End’. It also has more than 11,000 listed buildings and 56 conservation areas and its showpiece landmark, the Palace of Westminster, is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. And while millions flock there each year to enjoy its historic sites and its ample, well-cared for public realm, much of its charm is in the detail: the street signs for example, designed by the architect Misha Black, a Jewish immigrant from Azerbaijan. It has new development sites too, at Paddington Basin, as well as at Victoria and Paddington stations.
