

Women in Architecture Awards 2017

Jane Drew Prize

ENTRY GUIDELINES

The Jane Drew Prize recognises an architectural designer who through their work and commitment to design excellence has raised the profile of women in architecture.

The prize is named after the great Jane Drew, who was a spirited advocate for women in a male-dominated profession. She graduated from the Architectural Association in 1929 into a profession that was unwelcoming to women at best. She started her own practice after the Second World War, and her work played a substantial role in introducing the Modern Movement into the UK.

In 2016, the prize was given to creative powerhouse and equality advocate Odile Decq. Previous winners include Grafton Architects' founders Yvonne Farrell and Shelley McNamara, Zaha Hadid, Kathryn Findlay of Ushida Findlay and Eva Jiřičná.

The judges reserve the right to move entrants between categories
